Michigan Department of Civil Rights and Michigan Asian Pacific American Affairs
Commission to Honor Fred Korematsu at Michigan State University on January 30, 2015

Lansing – The Michigan Asian Pacific American Affairs Commission (MAPAAC) and the Michigan Department of Civil Rights will honor the life of civil rights icon Fred Korematsu on Friday, January 30 at 4 pm. This event will be held at the MOSAIC Multicultural Unity Center in the MSU Union, located at 49 Abbot Road in East Lansing.

The event is free and open to the public.

Born on January 30, 1919, Korematsu defied the U.S. government's order to report to an assembly center after the bombing of Pearl Harbor. He was convicted for his refusal and appealed his case all the way to the U.S. Supreme Court, which ruled against him in a 6-3 decision in 1944.

After World War II, Korematsu moved to Michigan. His conviction was formally vacated on November 10, 1983 by U.S. District Judge Marilyn Hall Patel based on information that the War Department had misled the Supreme Court with false allegations of espionage and sabotage.

Korematsu's story is one of triumph over the injustice endured by Japanese Americans following the bombing of Pearl Harbor. In 1998, Korematsu was honored with the Presidential Medal of Freedom by President Bill Clinton.

Speakers at the event include:

- Matt Wesaw, Director of the Michigan Department of Civil Rights
- Ron Aramaki, psychotherapist and adjunct faculty at the Department of American Culture, University of Michigan
- Roland Hwang, Assistant Attorney General of Michigan, MAPAAC member and adjunct faculty at the Department of American Culture, University of Michigan
- Mary Kamidoi, internee at the Rohwer War Relocation Center in Arkansas
- Frances Kai-Hwa Wang, correspondent for NBC Asian America

Along with MAPAAC and the Michigan Department of Civil Rights, the event is sponsored by the Asian Pacific American Studies Program at Michigan State University.
